WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

Scattered showers will gradually taper off tonight. A few showers may linger into Tuesday morning across Central California. Otherwise tomorrow will be a dry and cool day. A couple of very cool nights are forecast for Tuesday night and Wednesday night which will lead to patchy frost especially Wednesday morning.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

A Pacific trough will bring scattered showers to Central California through Tuesday morning, with most locations getting less than a quarter inch of additional rainfall. However, up to an additional half inch of rainfall will occur over the Sierra and its surrounding foothills. Showers will move into Southern California this evening and continue through Tuesday morning, with less than a quarter inch of rainfall. Isolated showers will continue over the mountains through Tuesday afternoon. The snow level will be around 5,000 feet. South to west winds of 20 to 30 mph with gusts to 50 mph will surface across the mountain ridges and desert passes through Tuesday morning. Temperatures will be a bit below normal through Tuesday, with 40s to low 50s in the mountains and upper 50s and 60s in the valleys. On the back side of the trough, there will be north winds of 20 to 30 mph with gusts to 50 mph across the south coast of Santa Barbara, the Grapevine, and near the Colorado River Tuesday night. Temperatures will warm and humidity will lower into the teens Wednesday through Saturday as a ridge of high pressure builds into California from the Pacific. Temperatures will reach the low 80s over the warmer valley locations of Southern California Friday and Saturday. Northeast to east winds of 15 to 25 mph with gusts to 40 mph will surface across the mountains and below the canyons and passes of Southern California Thursday night through Friday afternoon.
